A Plan to Enslave Those Who Want to be 'Left Alone'

Had I died at 50, 30 years ago, I would have passed-on with a simpler/better view of human nature. Now, when it comes, if there's time to reflect, I will reflect on an enigma.

On my way south, after having lost touch for 20 years, I acted on an invitation to visit an old friend and his wife, and stay at their beautiful home on the California coast.

By now I should anticipate problems with someone I knew back when we were all 'liberal's'. He soon volunteered that the Constitution/Bill of Rights are no longer relevant to deal with what were unanticipated problems back in 1770s, such as gun violence, gold, and 'archaic debris' such as the 'electoral college'—that undermines democracy.

With epithets flying, 'old white men', 'white privilege', 'slaveholders', it wasn't long before I forget Willie Nelson's rule to live by—'never miss an opportunity to shut the f... up'. Though I practice it in my own home, I reminded him that the average age for signers of the Declaration of Independence were in their late 20s—'young white men'.

For the uninitiated it's difficult to understand a president being elected who doesn't win the popular vote (or the reason less populated states get the same number of senators as more populated states. An abiding theme in the Constitution/Bill of Rights is 'impediments' to block moves by government to redefine the 'republic' (wherein citizens retain power), as a 'democracy'—which our founders understood to be 'mob rule'.

To this end, the founders gave us a more complicated governance—one crafted so as to make it difficult for the federal government to strip us of rights/'take control'. Recognizing the historical dichotomy between 'inalienable rights' and 'government control', the founders intention was to assure that rights of citizens would remain sacrosanct.

My friend (propagandized by Google/Gore/Kerry/Gates), fears a coming global starvation (as measured by population divided by available resources), and driven by 'climate change'. Under that assumption, he's willing to hand-over constitutionally-guaranteed rights to government to fix the mess that they (through ignorance or evil), made.

He sees me as 'stuck in the past'—but the sad truth is a likelihood that he has come to hate his country, and bought into all-out war, waged on the Constitution and Bill of Rights—documents containing all we need for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—with an amendment process to correct failings—slavery, voting rights, etcetera.

Those who don't understand, see 'the founders/law of the land' as responsible for destroying our nation, when it is government, 'hollowing out' the Constitution, in a power grab, that is responsible for compromising our rights, and the resulting havoc.

Why do so many Americans hate their country? They don't understand that 'power begets power'—what our founders had foremost in mind when they attempted to keep the power in the hands of the people/states. Runaway government defines disaster.

Those who hate this nation also hate gold. They don't understand that gold functions as 'stingy parents', requiring we save to buy something—rather than go into debt.

By coincidence, my old friend's condemnation of the Constitution took place on December 15th, 'Bill of Rights' day—causing me to think back to high school when the Bill of Rights was revered—with a curriculum built around on the 'civic virtue' found within.

Maybe if I take a closer look at the 1st 10 Amendments (Bill of Rights), that could convince me to give over my governance and rights to the 'chosen ones'—WEF/WHO?

Let's have a look. The 1st Amendment is written in the negative: "Congress shall make no law" establishing religion, abridging free speech, press, peaceful assembly, petition government for grievances. That one is easy. Whether your name be Robert Reich/Bill Gates, if you want to curb any of the above, you opt for 'control' over 'rights'.

2nd Amendment: My friend appreciates there is to be 'no standing army' in the Constitution, but he is not at all keen on citizens armed with military grade weapons to 'put down insurrection, enforce laws, repel invasion'. Or the thought of teachers—armed.

3rd Amendment: no soldiers garrisoned in your home—anybody want that? How about 4th Amendment right to privacy—disallowing 'unwarranted search'? Another example of the distance between 'inalienable rights'/'government control'. Anybody supporting search and surveillance of citizens has lost touch with what it is to be human.

Amendments 5/6: Jan 6th defendants and Trump—our right to 'due process' is being trashed. Instead of a 'speedy public trial' with an 'impartial jury', Americans are subjected to draconian imprisonment for what are misdemeanors—at worst. Our judicial system, fully politicized, is out to entrap and to get any found to be opposing the narrative.

Amendments 7/8: Jury trial, yes, but not necessarily in a jurisdiction where the supposed crimes occurred—done to provide a jury with views that support government. Excessive bail—better yet for the tyranny—no bail. That goes for past presidents also.

Amendment 9: The government cannot construe rights enumerated in the Constitution to be used to deny other rights guaranteed therein. Government's judicial actions function to do exactly that—with a mission of curtailing rights retained by the people.

Amendment 10: Powers not delegated to the United States are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people. Vital for preserving freedom, yet 1000s of unnecessary laws/regulations are passed by Congress to take powers away from citizens.

Recognizing the resources/policing power used to wage war on our 'founders/founding documents', and on those Americans that want nothing more than to be 'left alone' is cause for great concern, but will elite dollars be enough to defeat the idea of liberty?

What the elite are not accounting for is the 'grace of the silent majority'. Not the 'silent majority' who were used in a 'love it or leave it' campaign to support the Vietnam 'police action', but the grace of Americans who want to be left alone. Who require nothing more than a 'fair playing field' on which to live out their lives/follow their dreams.

The elite are stupid but they are clever—and they intend that we will 'own nothing and be happy'. They have a plan, beyond anything most of us recognize, that they intend to inflict on us. A plan that will turn 'grace into rage'. That plan is my next article.
