

“Democracy” Is A Scam! What You Really Know Is BS!

By Matthias Chang – Future Fast-Forward

Screwing Your Grey Cells

This article is written with a deliberate purpose – to provoke and compel YOU to spring clean your brainwashed mind and subsequent to the thorough cleansing, think and re-examine your long held beliefs!

By all means get angry – curse, condemn and give me your best shot! However, and in spite of this provocation, you are not angry, there is a chance that you can be saved from the gullibility that you have been infected with.

The word democracy in the title is within quotation marks and this technique compels YOU to define for me what little you know about “Democracy”.

And since you did not even notice the quotation marks, and but you go on a rampage to curse and insult me, you are giving the justification to the Elites to hold the view that the 98% of the voters cannot be trusted and must do their biddings. Ouch!

The Elites’ Contempt

The following quotations will set you straight:

- “THOSE living in dictatorships often harbour the delusion that the point of democracy is that you get the government you want. Those living in democracies soon realise that is not the system’s most salient feature: rather, it is that a large number of voters get the government they do not want and are expected to put up with it until the next election. In many young democracies, politicians find this hard to accept. So governments rig elections to make sure they win; and opposition parties reject elections they think they will lose.”

- “Republic or Democracy? A distinction with a difference to the American Revolution. People often use the term “democracy” when referring to the United States. The distinction between a republic, which is technically what we are, and a democracy seems lost on those who intermingle the terms as if they were synonyms. If you note that we are not a democracy, but a republic, you risk being mocked as strict constructionists overly wedded to technical definitions and unwilling to acknowledge the importance of popular sovereignty and the will of the people in our system. This is unfortunate, as the question of whether we are a democracy or a republic is an important one, complex, and reliant on clear definitions of words and their use. Strictly speaking, the United States is a representative Republic, not a democracy. “The distinction has a difference. It greatly influenced the American Revolution, and arguably saved the future Republic from ruin in its darkest days.”

- "The best argument against democracy is a five-minute conversation with the average voter."

Winston Churchill

A working class reviewer of the above Churchill's quotation wrote,

"Many years ago, I was working in a paint factory laboratory. There was a general election due. Harold Wilson was PM then, as I remember. One of the men from the shop floor suggested I'd probably vote Labour, as I was working class. I pointed out one of the main planks of Labour's manifesto and asked what he thought of it. He said he didn't agree with it. I then went through some other manifesto pledges. He didn't agree with any of them. I asked why he planned on voting Labour when he disagreed with most of their manifesto. He replied "Because Labour's for the working man. That's what Churchill meant. Elections are decided by people who don't understand the issues. They vote Labour, Tory, or Liberal because their fathers did, or some other specious reason."

That is how Malaysians vote as well.

However, the knowledgeable working class reviewer, additionally wrote,

"Moreover, Churchill embodied the spirit of an agonizing, colonizing Empire like the British one, that for most of its existence was devoted to the dual goal of 1) fucking (excuse my English) France and Germany in wars and 2) fucking China and India by robbing shamelessly from those countries all the riches accumulated during centuries to create richness at home, while attributing British richness only to industrialization, gene superiority of white race, and their ability at war, something I don't find democratic enough to merit much consideration."

Malaysians smugly (even the professional class etc.) declare that they are so clever and knowledgeable and Malaysia is a "democracy"!

Historical Exposés.

- Socrates feared democracies would elect demagogues. Just as he feared majority rule could lead to misinformed voting, he feared that those running for office themselves would lack the wisdom needed to lead and might use their elected position for personal gain rather than the common good.
- What is Plato's concept of democracy? Democracy is a denial of the principle of qualification; it holds that every citizen has a right to participate in government; but a right must correspond to capacity, and Plato believes that the average person has neither the knowledge nor the native intelligence requisite for governance.
- Aristotle "disliked the power that he thought the expansion of democracy necessarily gave to the poor."⁴
- Thucydides, the famous ancient Greek historian of the Peloponnesian War, witnessed the fall of Athenian democracy and applied scientific history in his critique of the democratic government. At the heart of his critique were how democracy failed "in the search for truth" and how leaders and citizens attempted "to impose their own speech-dependent meanings on reality".

- Thomas Hobbes, one of the first philosophers of the Enlightenment, published Leviathan in 1651 in defense of "absolute sovereignty" and supporting the royalists in the English Civil War. Hobbes was a critic of democracy because "the sovereign in a democracy (i.e. the people) can only exercise its power when it is actually assembled together... Only in a monarchy is the capacity to govern always exercised." Hobbes also thought democracy would lead to instability, conflict, glory seeking, mistrust, and undermining the social contract.

Influence of Media

From Wikipedia:

Malleability of public opinion is cited by Joseph Schumpeter (Harvard Professor) as a reason to prefer technocracy to democracy, while others concerned about the sway of the public argue for limiting the ability of money to play a role in democracy. Critics claim that mass media actually shapes public opinion, and can therefore be used to "control" democracy.

Social bots and other forms of online propaganda as well as search engine result algorithms may be used to alter the perception and opinion of voters. In 2016 Andrés Sepúlveda disclosed that he manipulated public opinion to rig elections in Latin America. According to him, with a budget of $600,000, he led a team of hackers that stole campaign strategies, manipulated social media to create false waves of enthusiasm and derision, and installed spyware in opposition offices to help Enrique Peña Nieto, a right-of-centre candidate, win the election. Televised debates and, according to George Bishop, inaccurate opinion polls may also be able to shift election outcomes.

President Trump has exposed extensive voting fraud in the 2020 presidential elections that resulted in Biden's victory. When voting is rigged in the USA, can you assert that voting elsewhere is clean? Votes can be rigged and are rigged! Period!

Is America a Republic or A Democracy

Be shocked! It has been admitted in the below extract by "Constituting America"

"The original text of the United States Constitution never mentions the word democracy, and only mentions republic as a form of government once in Article IV, Section 4 ("The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government..."). Interestingly, that clause refers to the states, and not the federal government itself. Throughout the text the founders refer to the United States as the "union" or as the "United States" but never a republic or a democracy. The Declaration of Independence does not use either term at all."

Parting Words

Please read and study carefully the Federal Constitution. If you have not read the Constitution, why not?

If you had, I would be obliged if you could cite for me the relevant Article that has the words “Democracy” or “Democratic Government”.

If and when you have read this article and still do not understand the purpose and objective of my article, have another “spring cleaning” exercise!

The Constitution is the Supreme Law, and we would expect clarity and precision in this National Supreme Law.

But, we are inundated with Constitutional experts’ comments and opinion, such as “Malaysia has parliamentary democracy”, “Malaysia is a Constitutional Monarchy”, “Parliament is Supreme” (which is all BS) as there are no Articles in the Constitution providing for such supremacy or other types of supremacy!

So, what do you really know about “DEMOCRACY”?
