updates on the insane world of money and power

'Your My First Uber-Ride Passenger—Ever'

As Americans scramble, just to keep their heads above the economic waters, they try anything to make ends meet. But will that work—and for how long? What's it telling us?

From where does the money come to pay for whatever it is we are paying for? Not from those Federal Reserve Notes. Those are well named—notations. Currency is not money. Currency is the thing we exchange for goods and services. Money is what stands behind currency, the hard work/productivity that currency functions to exchange.

But without productivity, currency is nothing but the faith that backs it. With currency that is simply printed, there is no money. And, when currency is allowed to be printed into un-payable debt, not only is money not involved, the currency becomes valueless.

This is the situation for now and the future for the US. Overall, it's important that Trump dislocates the 'left' this fall—but beyond that I have few expectations for a Trump Administration. On one level, it won't matter what Trump does, because interest rates are going nowhere but up. As rates rise, where is the breaking point for the US?

The most concerning thing for Americans, lulled into economic complacency, will be a shelled-shock reality that is fast-coming for them. There are 237 American cities where starter homes cost more than a million dollars. Half, 117, are cities in California.

The pundits tell us that neither rents nor home prices will decline because of low inventory—suggesting it's axiomatic that homeowners are unaffected—outside the economic fray. Not the case: homeowners are in the same dire economic straits as everybody else, and when forced to sell, they will—in unanticipated/unimaginable numbers.

Given high rents/impossible mortgages, where do young persons, including college graduates, live? With parents, not by choice but because they cannot comfortably afford rents/home purchase. The number capable of living on their own—falls each year.

Massive counterfeit dollars caused the dollar to lose purchasing power—resulting in rents rising faster than wages, causing young persons to move-in with parents. What is not taken into account is young persons, soon, not having an option of living with parents. Parents, aging, and feeling economic squeeze, sell their homes/downsize. The kids will then face an inevitable shift towards homelessness as parents move/pass on.

The prospects for young persons is much worse now than at the height of the Great Depression. In 1940, 7% of young people lived with parents. In 2023 that number rose to 17%. In 1940, 11 years into the stock market crash, with FDR's full-blown socialism (neo-communism), having made little progress towards economic sustainability, it took a world war to pull the US out of nonproductively. The cost for that: 3% of global population—85 million dead. Now, with a global population of 8 billion—250 million will die?

Because we abandoned the gold standard in favor of a funny money path, we now have to pay the piper 250 million lives to right the economy? Seems not well thought out—wouldn't you say? We opted to slaughter 85 million people rather than allow the stock market and the economy to burn through 1929 grift. A muscular nation of big shoulders, 1930 Americans knew how to work. All they needed was a fair-playing field.

Everything besides gold and silver is credit—including bitcoin and mining shares. Well ahead of his time, Jim Sinclair posited that the price of gold would see no ask unavailability—a likely future where the dollar goes to zero. How does that come to be?

The world (including Americans), comes to the realization that the US, an unproductive nation, buried in non-serviceable debt, lied about everything, including a fiction that it possessed more than 8000 tons of gold—not audited since the 1950's. That only works until BRICS (including most of humanity/global energy supply), initiates a 40% gold-backed settlement currency—with a requirement for put-up or shut-up gold audit.

Ask the experts where the money comes from to fund a non-productive North America? There is no money. Plebs are paid in bills of credit—which go onto the balance sheet that each pleb owes. The government owes nothing—we plebs owe everything.

The beat goes on. There will be buy signals all the way down—with lots of excuses. Jobless claims came in last week at 400K while Jerome Powell tried to keep a straight face. At the same time, an important measure for the economy, construction, collapsed.

Powell holds onto an ephemera, maintaining the economy is strong. Meanwhile, business suffers new orders falling and an un-sustainability of falling prices. Making it worse, average Americans feel a need of $180K to live comfortably. 6% make $180K.

This brings us to the present reality wherein the Empire will do whatever it takes to retain power. Consider the US Government as 1 party, with factions. Neither Biden/Obama/Harris will give-up power to Trump, though economically not much will change.

That's why elite control of the wealth is of paramount importance. It doesn't matter that elites gain control through Smart (corporate) Coins or CBDC, as long as control is taken. But cash represents only 2/3% of all currency out there, so what's so important?

The stakes are much higher than getting rid of a few percent of paper/coins—it's about absolute control. As my Canadian friend suggests: if Trudeau is displaced by Poilievre, who initiates a gold standard, would Canada then be safe from US invasion?

It's not about a minuscule amount of cash trading hands, so what is it about? It's about those first-time Uber drivers, and kids living with parents, and the shell-shocked reality along our horizon. Massive failures on the economic horizon is cause for consternation/terror among elites who are about to be exposed as inept—for all to see.

Before that happens, elites need to get us locked down in place. In fact, they have to have all of Asia and the BRICS under control. They need social scores/CO2 measures and CBDC/SmartCoin as determinants for amounts allotted/use of guaranteed income.

As if all of this were not frightening enough, we need to consider Kamila Harris, who under a barrage of network propaganda has more than doubled her popularity/electability, over a few days. This suggests a possibility the proposed November election—either by hook or crook—is to be once again prevailed over by the left. My next article.
